1. Sventoji (approximately N56-02, E21-04) today, in comparison with before the war, has the appearance of an abandoned village. The majority of the fishermen now work from Lepaya and other fishing ports. Most of the older inhabitants emigrated when the Germans retreated, or have left the village since. The fishermen's houses in the dunes are being pulled down by the remaining local inhabitants, who use the dry timbers for firewood, leaving the wet wood to rot.
2. Page 2 contains the legend for the sketch map of Sventoji on page 3.

Legend for Sketch Map

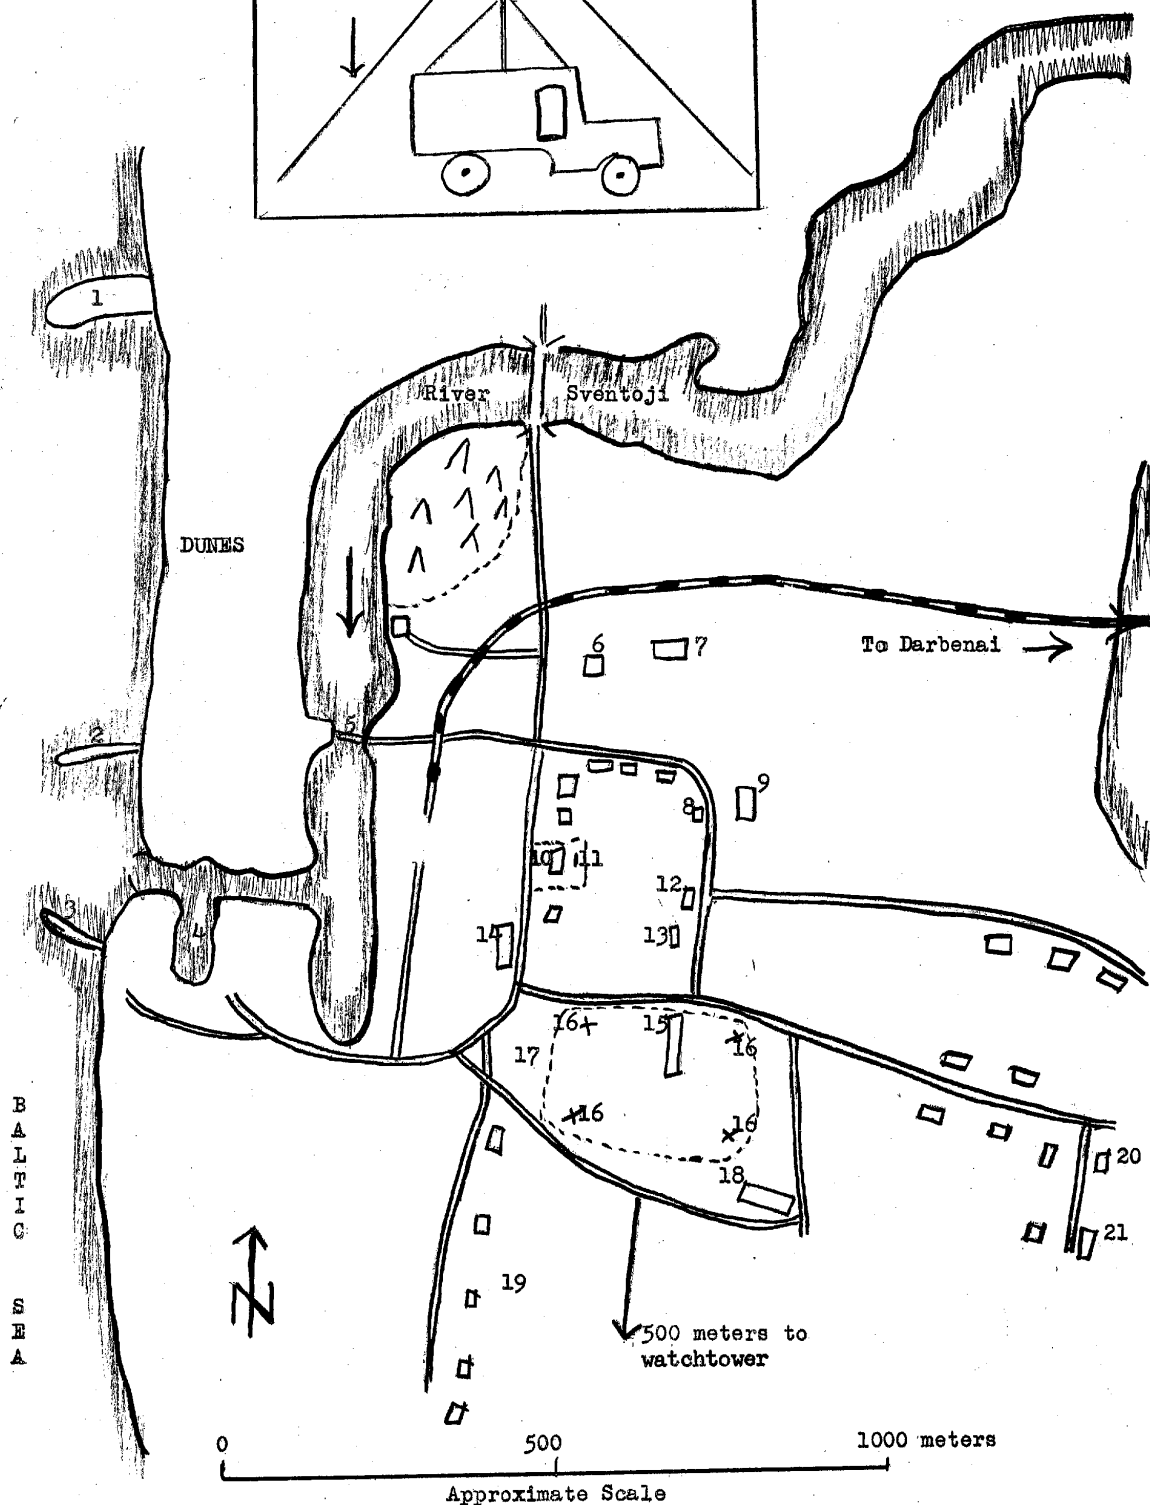

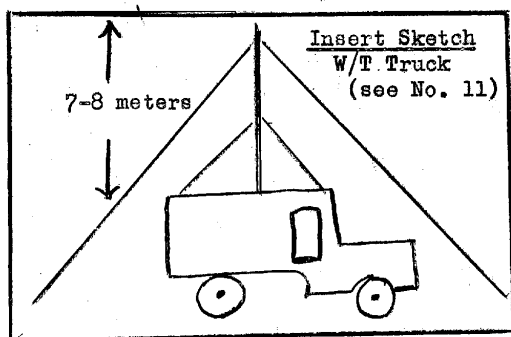

1. Short Mole, begun before the war but never completed
2. North Mole
3. South Mole
4. Fishing Harbor where about 15 to 20 small fishing boats were moored
5. Old locks, now unused; only the foot bridge was in use
6. House belonging to local inhabitant named Kubas
7. House belonging to local inhabitant named Simans
8. Village shop
9. House belonging to local inhabitant named Cimpa
10. Naval W/T station manned by six Soviet Navy sailors who were billeted on the second floor and worked their W/T sets from the ground floor.
11. Truck with W/T aerial and generators stationed in the backyard of the W/T station (see Insert Sketch, page 3, for diagram of truck). The truck had its own generators. This was proved when, during the first postwar years, Sventoni had no electricity. The inhabitants would buy drinks for the sailors, who then would string electric wires from the truck to the houses; the connection provided electric light, and its duration depended on the number of drinks the sailors had received
12. A fishery office
13. House where Frontier Guard officers were billeted
14. House belonging to local inhabitant named Jurevics
15. Frontier Guard Komendatura manned by about 50 Frontier Guards who were also billeted in the same house. On top of the building was a small watchtower
16. Four machine gun nests
17. Barbed wire fence
18. Elementary school
19. Five bungalows
20. Secondary school
21. Another fishery office
